NOT A UTILITY CURE-ALL

Public ownership of public utilities is due for a downpour of praise and panegyrics with the national conference of the Public Ownership League of America scheduled to open in Los Angeles late this month. Enough propaganda should issue from this confab to gladden the heart of the most ardent advocate of public ownership.

The public will hear of 6,000 American communities that operate one or more of their own utilities; of public power in Seattle, Tacoma, San Francisco, the San Joaquin Valley, Pasadena, Los Angeles and other Southern California cities; of big schemes for harnessing the Columbia and the St. Lawrence; of the amazing extension of municipal gas plants throughout the country; of cities that let their utilities profits pay all expenses in lieu of taxes; of many another adventure in community ownership.

Neither the conferees nor the public will hear of the communities that have gone public-ownership crazy with the result that they have saddled themselves with debts and taxes they cannot carry, assumed responsibility for public service they cannot render and created a new gold mine for political grafters.

Public ownership is not a panacea; neither will it perform miracles. Communities should not let themselves be stampeded into public ownership by the signal success made of it by some other municipalities. Just as there are towns which can serve themselves cheaper and better there are others which cannot afford public ownership. It is the duty of every community to investigate the possibilities of public ownership lest they buy in haste and repent at leisure.

POLICE HAVE A BIG JOB

A complete scientific revision and modernization of the criminal code in order that the states may work with uniformity and precision in dealing with crime is urged by a committee representing the American Bar Association, the American Law Institute and the Association of American Law Schools.

Back of the recommendation is the thought that society is trying to fight crime with antiquated weapons while crime has the advantage of every modern improvement. Especially desired is a criminal code and court procedure that will remove those loopholes through which the guilty sometimes escape and those common causes for the court's delay.

Reforms in this direction might prove useful in the nation's war on crime, but too great dependence should not be placed on them as crime preventives. There are not that many guilty ones who escape punishment through defects in the law and court procedure to remove from the criminal mind all fear of the law and punishment.

The problem is one of catching the criminal, not of punishing him. Gangsters and highwaymen are emboldened by the small chance of capture. Though the record of the criminal courts is not 100 per cent it is much higher than that of the police. Bring the malefactor into court and the average jury will do justice to his case.

CHAPTER I

The jewels caught the lamplight and tossed it back in a thousand glittering points of fire—wonderstones of crimson-dark flame that seemed to fill the bare chamber with this blaze of splendor. Blood-red rubies.

Other jewels, too. The fabled treasure-houses of eastern kings might have been despoiled to fill the opened casket on which the eyes of the two men, master and servant, were bent. Diamonds frost-white, sapphires that had stolen the living blue of tropic lagoons, emeralds, pearls; all the imprisoned iridescence of a rainbow heaped in one gold casket.

One looked at these other jewels holding one's breath; but it was to the rubies, their miracle of flawless beauty, that one's eyes always returned. Those stones had flashed through the dim twilight of history, had gleamed from the white throat of an empress at the Winter palace of the czars—historic jewels that had been the gift of that same empress to an ancestor of this tall, erect, white-haired figure, whose name until the world had fallen into ruin for him and his had been one of the great names of Russia.

Alexis Murinov stood looking for a long moment at the rubies with strangely absorbed, wistful eyes. He knew in his heart, by some sure premonition, that he was looking at them for the last time.

RED TIDE

In the lamplight that royal gift glowed like tears of blood . . . the color that in this grim year of revolution had become like the symbol of his country, spreading over stricken Russia in an ever-widening flood, till now at last here in his remote castle in the south he saw its red tide surging up to its very walls.

A wild night of storm. Storm in the wind that came sweeping up over the vast steppes to beat in fury against this centuries-old castle on its towering hill. Black, frowning and rugged against the skyline, four-square to all the winds, it had weathered many a storm in its long life . . . but this rising storm of man's elemental passions that threatened it now; would it weather that?

From the narrow slit-window of this tower room Prince Murinov's sombre eyes looked down at the huddled village at the foot of the hill far below, its darkness painted by the flare of dancing torches, by drifts of red lit smoke from fired buildings; devil's music of mad exultant laughter, of pitiful cries and tortured screams, of crackling shots, all mounted in a delirious crescendo to the cold, watching stars.

Revolution had been slow in reaching this out-of-the-world corner of Russia. Months ago terror and death had been loosed in the great cities, sweeping through the streets like a prairie fire, leaving their ghastly trail of wreckage and desolation . . . killing far killing's sake, destruction for destruction's sake . . . devils of blood-lust and plunder-lust unchained.

For weeks the mutterings of storm had been drawing nearer. Almost with the first warning Alexis Murinov's daughter, who on her English husband's death had come back with her little girl to her own people, had been sent away from the castle—into safety, it was hoped. Murinov and his sons had stayed. A man of their blood must not show the white feather.

Harsh and tyrannical many of the overlords in Russia might have been, but the treatment of the peasantry employed on the great Murinov estates had always been kindly and just. Little was that likely to count now with passions deliberately inflamed. From the tower window he could see the crowd surging up the hillside toward the castle like a pack of ravening wolves, the flaring torches lighting up mad eyes of lust and covetousness and hatred. Soon there would come a thunderous crash on the great gates and then—who knew?

NO TIME TO LOSE

He turned to the younger man, spurred to sudden feverish activity. "But, we are losing time, Federoff!"

He thrust the rubies into the casket with the other jewels and snapped down the lid. At least this screaming mob should be disappointed of the loot it dreamed of, these heirlooms saved from bloodstained, plundering hands! All his plans were made. It only remained for Federoff to carry them out—Federoff whose unwavering loyalty seemed almost the one steadfast thing in a changing, crumbling world.

"But your highness—" There was agony in the eyes of Federoff—a tall, striking figure in whose veins Polish blood mingled with Russian, who for years had managed the vast Murinov estates. Only too well Federoff knew that for his master to face that mad-demon mob could only mean one thing. He had pleaded in vain before that the prince and his sons should fly; his repeated plea was still quite unavailing against the rock of Murinov pride.

"We wait here, my sons and I. Our place is here," said his master curtly. "Only to you I entrust these jewels. The gift of a Czarina must not fall into such hands!" And the prince glanced down from the window again. For a moment his hand rested on Federoff's shoulder. "I am trusting you, Federoff, with the honor of the house."

"I am very proud, your highness. Have no fear." There was a break in Federoff's voice.

"I have none, for I know you, my son. Now hurry, hurry—before it is too late!"

Almost as the older man spoke there came the sound of a crash of impact as a heavy bulk of timber, used as a ram, met the immensely thick castle gates.

Death already beating on the doors. No time to lose!

INTO THE DARKNESS

On the further side of the castle overlooking the sheer hillside a window opened cautiously. No sound on this side of the gaunt mass of stonework, no movement in the shadows. Only the driving wind and the dark, rocking trees. Now was the moment—now!

Swiftly, stealthily, the guardian of the Czarina Rubies slipped out into the wind and the darkness.

Federoff carried a lantern, but he dared not light it yet. With only the dim stars to guide him he scrambled down the steep, rugged mountain-side. The hiding place had been decided on hours before all his preparations were made.

Borne to his ears on the wind from the further side of the castle broke the sudden sound of a splintering crash. The gates were down and the mob was in! Federoff could hear its savage, almost animal-like cries as it swept into the courtyard—and he shuddered.

What would he find there when he had accomplished his task?

But he had a duty before him, a trust to fulfill. Nothing must stand in its way. Stumbling in the darkness, buffeted by the wind, bruising himself against fragments of rock, he clambered desperately downward on that strange journey.

(To Be Continued Tomorrow)

AUTUMN GOWNS ARE MOST REMINISCENT OF GRANDMA'S TIME

Pert and Piquant Modes Are Alluringly Romantic; Puffed Sleeves Back

By Alice Langelier (I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

PARIS, Sept. 23.—Pert and piquant are feminine modes for autumn and winter, alluringly romantic and reminiscent of the days of our grandmothers.

But now that the first big fashion flurries are over, one is comfortably assured that the silhouette is not dangerously changed and that there are really only suggestions of bustles and crinolines on frocks that must be worn in subways and street cars—instead of fine coaches and carriages.

Husbands will have something to murmur about the day dresses with skin-tight bodices which fasten down the back with a few dozen closely set buttons. When they are worn with prim little fur capes and round muffs to match the little caps worn at a jaunty forward tilt, grandmother's portrait "when a child" immediately comes to life.

Puff sleeves and pouched elbows with the old-fashioned oblong silk-covered button, woolen frocks with rows of tucks on the skirts, coats with capes trimmed with bands of fur, a tight-fitting jacket with the front and flared basque trimmed with bands of fur and a stand-up collar, are more piquant period effects.

A quaint pinafore decolletage comes on an evening gown with stiffened epaulettes and lace yoke inset in the square neckline. Then there are little capes and capelettes, fur yokes made in one with the high collar of fur and rows of frills in fantastic movements.

BRISTOL A. A. WINS SEASON'S OPENING GAME

(By T. M. June)

Bristol A. A. opened its football season on Sullivan's field yesterday, scoring a 6-0 triumph over the Daytona Triangles, in a slowly-played game.

The poor condition of the playing field was the reason for the slowness of the game. During the entire forty-eight minutes of play there were no spectacular plays, nor did any one player gain more than eight yards on any play.

However, both elevens played good football considering the facts that it was their initial start of the season and not all of the players are in shape. There were no heavy penalties during the fray and only one five-yard penalty for offense was called.

Coach Corrigan gave every player a chance to show his wares and all showed up to be very fine prospects. "Petie" Court, a newcomer on the A. A., made a fine impression on the fans by his wonderful playing. Although but a youngster, this player seemed to be the nemesis of the invaders. Time after time he broke in to stop the visitors' plays before they got started. His recovery of a fumbled kick led to Bristol's only score of the game and victory.

"Eddie" Roe and "Sid" Trott also were valuable men to the locals. Roe, starting on the defense with Trott, did some fine work in running the plays.

Donahue and Costello bore the brunt of the losers' attack, but never seemed to break away for any long runs as they did in their previous invasion of Bristol. Ranaldi played well in the line.

The only casualty of the game happened in the first period when "Henry" Kornstedt pulled a tendon in his leg.

The only score of the fray took place in the third period. Dougherty in kicking on Bristol's fourth down sent a long punt to Donahue, who fumbled. After the ball had slipped through several players' hands, Court fell on the pigskin on the visitors' eight-yard line. On three line plays the A's took the ball over, Hutchinson doing the carrying. David's try for the extra point was blocked.

Walter opened the game by kicking to Bristol's forty-yard line. Lynch hit the line for four yards. Two off-tackle plays failed and Dougherty punted to Daytona's fifteen-yard line. Dever lost two yards on an end run. Talbot booted the ball to Bristol's forty-yard line. Hutchinson fumbled but recovered for a slight loss. Bristol kicked to Daytona's thirty-yard line. A long pass, Donahue to Mellon netted the visitors ten yards. Donahue, on a long end run, gained eight yards. Donahue added six more on another end run. Donahue carried the ball for the third consecutive time but Dougherty broke through the second defense and nailed him for a six-yard loss. As the teams lined up for another play the period ended.

Dever kicked to Bristol's thirty-yard mark as the second period began. Hutchinson hit tackle for five yards. Trott and Dougherty hit the line for a first down. Dougherty tried an end run but Miller broke through and stopped him for a five-yard loss. A reverse play failed for Bristol. Hutchinson hit the line without a gain. Dougherty kicked to Daytona's forty-yard line. Costello returning the punt ten yards. Talbot hit guard for two yards. Dever did a lot of running on an end run but he failed to gain, running across the field. Costello found an opening at center for six yards. Costello punted to Bristol's thirty-yard line. A Bristol back fumbled a pass from center and Remoldi recovered for Daytona. Costello failed to net anything on an end run. Roe nailed Dever for a ten-yard loss on an attempted end run. Daytona punted to Bristol's thirty-five yard line. Trott gained two yards on an off-tackle play. Dougherty failed on an end run. Dougherty booted the ball to Daytona's forty-yard line. A long pass, Donahue to Walter, failed as the first half ended.

To open the second half, Dougherty tried a short kick which worked with Bristol receiving the ball on the visitors' thirty-five yard line. Allen failed to gain on a line play. Hutchinson tried a pass to Allen which did not work. Dougherty punted to the invaders' eight-yard line where Talbot fumbled the kick. Court, after several plays had let the ball slip through their fingers, fell on the oval for Bristol. Hutchinson hit tackle for four yards. A reverse play failed. Lynch gained two yards and then Hutchinson carried the ball over for the first Bristol touchdown of the season. David's try for the extra point was blocked.

Dougherty kicked off to Quigley on Daytona's thirty-yard line. On two line plays Costello and Donahue netted four yards. Costello tried an end run and didn't gain any yardage. Talbot kicked to Bristol's thirty-yard line. Two line plays and a pass only gained five yards for Bristol and so Dougherty kicked to Daytona's forty-five yard line. Donahue returning the ball five yards, bringing it to midfield. McGee broke in for Bristol, getting Dever for a three-yard loss. Talbot gained four yards on an off-tackle play. A pass failed. Talbot got off a short punt to David who fumbled after being hit. Daytona recovering in midfield. Donahue gained two yards as the third session ended.

Daytona tried an aerial attack at the beginning of the last quarter and threw a five-yard penalty when two passes failed. Talbot then kicked to Bristol's twenty-five yard line. A fumble in the Bristol backfield lost ten yards. Dougherty punted to his own forty-yard line. Donahue did not gain on an end run. A pass failed. David intercepted the next pass and carried the ball ten yards. Trott went through the line for seven yards. Lynch hit tackle for a first down. Two passes failed. Dougherty dropped back to kick but was tackled before he got the punt off. Daytona receiving the ball on Bristol's thirty-yard line. Two end runs failed for Daytona. A pass was tried by the invaders and was intercepted by Court who gained eight yards before being downed. After failing to gain on two plays, Bristol kicked to Daytona's twenty-five yard line. The visitors opened another aerial attack without success and Bristol received the ball on the opposing team's ten-yard line. A line play and then a pass failed for Bristol as the game ended.

Think it over.

And remember — we're on duty ALL THE TIME.

These are times when it is important to take costs into account — the difference between the cost of transportation for you and your family in our buses and trolleys and the cost of transportation in your own car, is the difference between economy and extravagance.

That's the day you leave your own expensive-to-operate vehicle in the garage and get into one of our vehicles.

And maybe you're not thankful that we're on the job to take you to the station, to work, to school, to wherever you may be going!

There's another thing that is worth considering, and that is the cheapness of our bus and trolley service as compared to the cost of operating your own car.

That's one of the most important features of our bus and trolley service—it's available all the time.

If it's raining, snowing, hailing, blowing, hot, cold, dry—if it's the kind of day when you don't want your wife to drive and don't feel much like it yourself, the bus and trolley are running just the same.

80¢

For 80 cents you can telephone to friends, relatives or customers as far as 150 miles away—for friendly chats, family reunions, business transactions. And after 8:30 P. M. you can call them for only 50 cents!

The service is fast, clear, dependable—the calls easy to make. Just give the number to the operator (ask Information if you don't know it) and "hold the line."
